Lansing firm gets $370K for cyber security project

From Journal Staff Reports

LANSING — A local computer security firm has received $370,000 from the Department of Justice to work on a computer forensics project.

ATC-NY, located on Thornwood Drive in Lansing, received the award to create a tool law enforcement will be able to use to gather files used on peer-to-peer networks, according to the company and Sen. Charles Schumer's office. The law enforcement tool will be known as File Marshall.

ATC-NY is a wholly owned subsidiary of the Architecture Technology Corporation. The company's Lansing office, which is where the computer forensics project will take place, has been open for about 20 years. It employs about 20 people in New York, mostly in Lansing, said Julie Baker, the general manager of the office. The company does research and development for information technology and computer security.

Frank Adelstein will be the principal investigator on the project, Baker said.
